Defining Communication

- The word communication is derived from the Latin communis, which means "common", which refers to a natural activity of all humans, which is to convey opinions, feelings, information, and ideas to others through words (written or spoken), body language, or signs.
- The term communication can be defined as "purposive symbolic interchange resulting in workable understanding and agreement between the sender and the receiver". This interchange of information, ideas, and thoughts may occur via different modes: words (oral and written), sign, and gestures.
- It is the transfer of information and understanding from one person to another.
- It is a way of reaching others with facts, ideas, thoughts, and values.
- It is a bridge of meaning among people so that they can share what they feel and know.

Purpose of Communication

- Communication has two main purposes:
  - Communication to inform
  - Communication to persuade

- Communication to inform is directed by the desire to expose, develop, and explain the subject. It focuses on the subject of the communication.

- A communicator may seek primarily to persuade the reader or receiver of the message. In such a form of communication, the focus is on the receiver. Essentially, all communication is a deliberate and intentional act of persuasion. A persuasive communicator wants the reader to understand the message and to be influenced by it.

Basic Elements of Communication

The basic elements of communication are :

1. Message
2. Sender
3. Encoding
4. Channel
5. Receiver
6. Decoding
7. Acting
8. Feedback

Basic Communication Process

Process Of Communication

1. Sender (who develops ideas)
2. Message (the main element)
3. Encoding (converting message)
4. Selection of distribution channel
5. Receiver (target party)
6. Decoding (processing message)
7. Feedback (respond regarding the message)

marketinglord.blogspot.com